

U.S. FLYERS ABROAD NEED AERODROMES NEAR BATTLE LINE

By DAVID LAWRENCE.

more than 100 fighting planes, and we should have about fifty or sixty fields close up to the front.

Ground Must Be Right.
The ground must be of exactly the right kind, for unless the aviator can make a good landing he is likely to meet with an accident on rough ground, and both the machine and the aviator can be put out of business that way just as effectively as by an enemy fighter.

Not only must the ground be smooth and well drained but besides the hangars there must be machine and tool shops for repairs. We need several thousand mechanics and several thousand men to build enough aviation fields so that our fighters can ascend quickly from point of range and descend safely behind the front. America has laid out some fields a considerable distance back of the trenches for bombing work, as the heavier planes must gain their altitude here they cross into German territory, and they can get it just as well from these rear fields as anywhere else.

But the combat planes must ascend virtually from the fighting line, and America should arrange for enough fields, at least, to care for the coming production of battle planes.

In a pinch, our fighters could ascend out of the British or French fields and could board in their hangars, but our allies need all the space, and the Western Allies ought to be able to transport men and machinery enough to clear tactical ground back of the line for aviation purposes, and to erect repair shops so that combat planes can be fixed up without having to be sent a long distance back and kept out of commission several days longer than is necessary.

Kept Back By Censor.
Such facts as the absence of aviation fields would have come to the American people last Christmas and might have been built by now if the censorship abroad had not prevented. Great Britain is near enough to France so that frequent visits of correspondents make possible a revelation of the needs of the army. America is 3,000 miles away, and if it is the judgment of a censor that facts concerning the neglect of aviation grounds be suppressed, the American people are never likely to know about it until the war begins, and that sharply calls attention to the omission.

Preventive measures can always be taken if the people know about them in advance because public opinion applies its own corrective. The same is true of the censorship at home. We might have speeded production if we had been permitted to know just what the various factories which had been given contracts were doing about planes. Instead of suppressing production figures, they should be given out from week to week and contests in rapid production begun just as Messrs. Hurley and Schwab are doing about ships.

Need Another Schwab.
What the aircraft program needs is a man of magnetism and dynamic force like Schwab to go around among plants and workers and stimulate production. What the aircraft program also needs right away is some new designs for machines to be built immediately after the present orders are filled.

As it is, the reorganization and Congressional exposures have so upset matters that large gaps in production cannot be prevented. After getting the designs—assuming that they were ready today—it would take thirty to sixty days to build models and at the time to from drawings. Quantity production can be begun only after the first plane is finished. So the public must be prepared for further delays in October and November and possibly earlier when present orders will have been finished and the engineers and designers will be busy while the workmen will be idle.

Of course, the workmen will have training planes to build because while we have a surplus, the loss due to inexperienced flyers and instruction is large. But if we are to have a trained force of workmen able to turn out fighting craft in great quantities, we must help the factories hold their men by being prompt with new designs and orders.

Want Assurance.
Everywhere that I went last week in my visit to the different airplane factories that fact seemed to project itself forward as I examined the schedules and rate of production. Private companies will not enlarge their plants and take big risks unless the Government assures them of steady use for their new planes. Even now we must be prepared to spend large sums of money and to scrap many types of planes.

Even Liberty motor production will be ready by the end of October with present orders, and if the big factories that are making those motors and nothing else are kept going, they should be given an explicit understanding of the requirements of the Government after the present orders will have been filled.

Time Still Slipping Away.
In our solicitude over mistakes and delays of the past we should not forget that within the last few weeks of controversy time has been slipping by just the same and many important things are still undone. Publicity will help us to hasten production.

Publicity about what is happening abroad in aviation is even more essential or we shall awake some day and find that after America investigated itself and found the remedy, the authorities on the other side were not ready to receive the American battleplanes.

There is much ground for encouragement in the way the Government has approached the problem recently and the plants are rapidly passing from the stage of experiment to quantity production. Frankness on both sides of the Atlantic will help to make the aviation program a substantial contribution to the final victory.

Back up the boys in the trenches. Send your Red Cross gifts today to Henry B. F. Macfarland, 1222 F street northwest.

Let us fill the LAST DAY of the Red Cross drive with gifts truly from the heart and feel that we are shoulder to shoulder with the boys who are going to carry the Stars and Stripes to the greatest victory God has ever given to men fighting for honor and liberty.
